Figure A Google’s PowerMeter software, currently in prototype, will receive information from utility smart meters and provide that information to homeowners on the Google home page. The information includes total energy consumption and energy consumption by time of day.