Each message exchange comprises a master-initiated header followed by a slave’s reception or transmission (a). The master sends an identifier byte that uniquely defines the frame’s purpose within a system (b).